THE ROGERS MURDER.

Conclusion of the Inquest-The Murder Com mitted by Parties Unknown to the Jury-The Prisoners Still Held.

The inquest in this case was conclu morning. There was quite a large crowd present during the proceedings. On the assembling of the jury Assistant District Attorney Hutchings rose and the evidence in regard to the murder of Mr. Rogers which has been furnished by the police primary object of a coroner's indetermine the cause of death. It is The primary object of a coroner's inquest is to determine the cause of death. It is also the province of the jury to decide whether the evidence which has been presented to them is sufficient to point to any of the parties in custody as probably guilty, or whether it is so inconclusive as to lead to the belief that the murder was committed by unknown parties. Whatever may be the verdict of the jury the investigation in this case will be continued by the District Attorney and the police authorities.

Mr. Howe—I rise merely to protest that my client, James Logan No. 2, as he is called by the newspapers, although not accused of any participation in the murder, has been in custody for some time past. As a matter of justice to him I would state that there are present in court two witnesses who will prove conclusively that my client was in Greene street, who state that Logan was with them as late as a quarter to eight o'clock on the morning of December 31, and that one of them went to a drug store with him at that hour to see what time it was.

Mr. Townsend—I also have a few words to say concerning my client, against whom no testimony whatever has been brought; whose name, indeed, has not even been mentioned during the inquest. He has been incarcerated now for thirty days, and for humanity's sake I would can the attention of the Coroner to the fact that there are two witnesses present who are ready to give such testimony as will satisfy the jury that he had nothing to do with the murder.

The Coroner remarked that the evidence offered

The Coroner remarked that the evidence offered by the counsel was not at all necessary; that the object of the jury was only to ascertain the cause of the death of Mr. Rogers. He then addressed the jury, saying that they had a very important question to decide, and he hoped they would render a verdict which would be "satisfactory to the Coroner and the jury," jury."

All the testimony in the case was then read to the jury by the official reporter, when they retired for deliberation. After an absence of about half an hour they returned and delivered the following verdict in writing:—

hour they returned and delivered the following verdict in writing:—

We, the members of the Goroner's jury empanelled to investigate the cause of death of Charles M. Rogers, of No. 42 East Twelfth street, city of New York, who died on the 2a day of January, do, on the evidence produced before us, render the following verdict:—That said Charles M. Rogers came to his death from a stab wound in the abdomen received at the hands or some party or parties to the jury unknown, while sweeping his tront yard at his residence, No. 42 East Twelfth street, in the city of New York, at about a quarter before seven A. M. of Thursdan, December 31, 1888, of which said wound said Charles M. Rogers died on the morning of Saturday, January 2, 1868. The jury, in rendering this verdict to the public, cannot leave the case without remarking that they are led to the conclusion above streed for the reason that the testimony, as produced before them, is certainly the perpetrator of this horrible crime, although the jury are satisfied that in a part of the evidence produced there is deliterate perjury.

The counsel for the two Logans then moved an immediate discharge of their cilents, but the Ceroner refused, stating that he would hand them over to the District Attorney, for whatever disposition he saw fit.

The prisoners, who were followed from the City

The prisoners, who were followed from the City Hall to the Court House by an immense crows, were then taken before the District Attorney, who ordered them to be kept in custody until further orders.

who delight to write "special detective" after their names and who have never failed to sound the deepest mystery that has been sprung upon them, to their own satisfaction, if not the public's, whether it be a murder or the robbery of a hen roost, have again pleased themselves. For over a month they have allowed the car thieves respite and given Every poor fellow named "Tom," who answered the description given by the hungry little darky, who draws seven dollars per week for identifying everybody brought before him as the murderer, bas been arrested, locked up in the warm rooms of the fused access to them, and a system of espionage fol lowed with a view of securing some mysterious word or sentence to use against them in a court of

When Logan was arrested these sagacious clair-voyants, who profess to read a man's thoughts by the pupil of his eye, proclaimed with a fleurish of rhetoric worthy of a Tombs lawyer that they had got the man. When the facts showed that they knew no more about the real culprit than the Tycoon of Japan, they set their wits to work to secure another subject for self-audation. And thus one after another has been gathered this the cells only to be acquitted of all suspicion by the jury that yesterday rendered a verdict. Smarting under the mortification of defeat and the exposure of the barefaced reports published at their instigation, the ward detectives have for a sesson kept very quiet, and officers who profess no knowledge have taken the matter in hand with a view of obtaining some tangible due upon which to act. In their investigatons and searches they have unfortunately been under the necessity of working in conjunction with his class of know-nothings, who from the first hive botched the job, and are, therefore, more or less at their mercy. Unable to unearth the murderer themselves, they were loth to permit "common" officers to carry off the credit of accomplishing what they falled in, and consequently they have renewed theroof tactics of fabrication and mystification.

"They have got the real murderer of Mr. Rogers it last," remarked a high police official to a gentieman with whom he was conversing yesterday.

"Who is he!" was the query propounded.
"I cannot tell you; it is a profound secret; but he was arrested this morning."

"By whom ?"
"Sergeant Lowery, of the Fifteenth precinct."

"And you think there is no failure this time ?"

"Not the slightest doubt. The evidence against him is conclusive, and Rogers' murderer is in custody. You may depend upon that."

A few minutes later inquiries were made at the Fifteenth precinct station house on the subject.

"And so your officers have made another arrest in the Rogers case?"

"No, they have not. There has been no now."

o, they have not. There has been no new ar-

"And so your officers have made another arrest in the logers case?"

"No, they have not. There has been no new arrest."

"Oh, but you are mistaken. I have it from undoubted authority that Sergeant Lowery this morning arrested another party, who, it is claimed, is the real murderer."

"He has done nothing of the kind."

"But excuse me; I know he has. It was wel known at the central office hours ago."

"Who told you so!"

"Mr. —, and when he says so it is reliable."

"Well," was the reply, "a man has been arrested but Sergeant Lower; is not entitled to the credit. had a hand in it. But I am not going to say any thing or give anything to the reporters and the public, they have maligned us so. I was up all last night and got him this morning."

"And you think he is the genuine murderer?"

"He undoubtedly is."

The above is given as an example of the manner in which the detectives endeavor to mystify those with whom they converse on the subject and endeavor to exhibit their own sagacity.

That an arrest was made by Sergeant Lower; about one o'clock yesterday morning there is not a doubt. It is claimed by the professedly knowing ones that the coat and heij left by the murderer have been trued upon him sto. It exactly, and that he maswers in every particular the description given by Mr. Rogers and the colored boy of the murderer. There are many stories whispered about in policy circles as to the clues that led to this latest arrest, but they must be taken like strychnine—with much caution. One is that Mr. Rogers some time ago insured his life for $5,000 in an insurance company, but subsequently sold out his policy, after making two bayments. It is asserted that the policy got into the hands of speculators and last week payment was demanded upon it, as the premiums had been regularly paid. The insurance company conferred, it is said, with the friends of deceased, wha up to that time, were ignorant of the existence of the policy. The mair was demanded upon it, as the premiums had been regularly paid. The insurance compa during the fight with Mr. Louis described and the fight with Mr. Rogers described a biling the man whom Mr. Rogers described a friend of his assailant. Up to ten o'clock last night Sergeant Lowery had not succeeded in securing this fellow, but as he knows his haunts he had considence in his ability to secure him during the night.

It is believed that the District Attorney, who is familiar with the facts, will at once discharge all the narties previously arrested and held on suspicion of the assassination.

familiar with the facts, will at once discharge all the parties previously arrested and held on suspicion of being implicated in the assassination.

Sergeant Lowery, to whom the credit is due of making the arrest, if this be the right party, went to work on an entirely new theory. He believed that the murder was committed by a person who was in the habit of lodging in the station houses. Following up this idea, on Sunday night he visited all the station houses and had the lodgers turned out for an examination, which resulted in finding the man wanted. Last night he again made a tour of the station nouses in search of the other man wanted, but up to half-past tweive this morning his search was unsuccessful.

AMUSEMENTS. THEATRE FRANCAIS-FLEUR DE THE .-- A crowded

house, a clear night and public expectation wound up to the highest point greeted the first production of Charles Lecocq s opera at the Français last night. The curtain did not rise until nearly nine o'clock, owing to the sudden indisposition of Mme. Rose Bell (how is it that those French prime donne are so liable to be suddenly indisposed?), and the fact that Mile. Desclauzas, who took her place at a few hours' notice, could not have her costume ready a the regular opening hour. But long as the delay was the audience were amply compensated in the opera, both as regards the manner in which it was placed on the stage, and the music, in the choruses and the orchestration. We can safely state that no opera has been produced in this city for many years in such a complete manner in the way of mise en some and costumes as "Figure de Thé." The three sets of the opera present models of scenue art can acts of the opera present models of scenic art, es-pecially the last, a magnificent Chinese klosk, which is a spectacle in itself. As we said before in our pecially the last, a magnificent Chinese kiosk, which is a spectacle in itself. As we said before in our musical review, "Fleur de Thé" stands musically the first of all the works in opria bouffe as produced in this city. The music is infinitely better than anything ever written by Offenbach, and there is more character in it than the music of Herve. Yet nothing can be simpler or more unpretending than the number of this opera. There is not the slightest attempt at complex or elaborate orchestration, but the music sparkles from first to last. The finale of the second act is a charming chorus, something in the style of an old Moorish dance. It is a minor theme and contrasts pleasingly with the dashing "Ronde du Cliquot" which closes the opera. Both of those choruses will become the most popular of anything so far heard in opera bouffe in New York. The Chinese march also, in the first act, which savors of Meverbeer in carlicature form, and the ensemble which follows the discovery of Fleur de Thé in the chamber of the French cook, a reminiscence of "Eruani," are also striking choral features in this work. Regarding the leading robes much praise is due to Messrs. Beckers and Petit for their irressible drohery in the characters of the Chinese Mandarin and the Captain of the Tigers. Their "make up" was ludicrous in the extreme, and the Frencaptain looked the "miliest mannered villam that e'er cut throut." They made a decided hit in both Celestial robes, Mile. Desclanzas sang and acted charmingly, and in the vivandicre's song and the romance in the second act she was entirely satisfactory. Mine. Rizarelli's voice is rather thin and weak, and there was a want of esprit and life about her rendering of the rôte of Fleur de Thé which piaced that character undeservediv in the background. Carrier appeared to better advantage in the character of Pinsonnet han any we have seen him in before, and he seemed to have got rid of much of his usual sluggishness. He sang the couplets, vi'ait cour grossir is fonie," a presto novement, WALLACK'S THEATRE-SHAKSPERIAN PESTIVAL-resently. The town is not absolutely given up to nodel artists, female acrobats, nigger minstrelsy done in French and underground railroads. Shakspeare is looking up again. That sparkling diamond of a comedy, "Much Ado About Nothing," at Wallack's last night was "a palpable hit." Twenty dollars, for instance, for two seats in the rear of the parquet, offered and declined, will serve as a sign. But the gathering of the mountaineers was such as to show that "the hard-fisted democracy" have a than London gin or Jersey lightning. Their enthu-siasm over this Shaksperian festival was positively refreshing. The treat was to them a new sensation,

Never, we dare say, even in London, was this play Never, we dare say, even in London, was this play so magnificently put upon the stage as it was in this house last night. The costumes were truly elegant; those of Beatrice and Hero were of queenly magnificence, dazzling and superb—the special admiration of every lady in the house. Benedict, too, was gotten up—s the Prince Royal of Bachelors, with the wealth of he indies to back him. But the scenery was the he indies to back him. But the scenery was the crowning excellence of this beautiful reproduction, from first to last. The opening view from the terrace of the Governor's palace of the bay and city of Messina is a charming picture. The ballroom in the palace is flue; but the palace garden, with its overshadowing tree, its wreath of roses, its marble ornaments, with its vines, rich in their clusters of real Isabelia grapes, and its plashing fountain of living water, was a perfect gem of poetry illustrated; and with the singing party in gentle music reciting those pretty words:—

Sign no more, laddes, at he no more, the illusion was complete. We were in the midst of gen of poetry liustrated; and with the singing party in gentle music recting those pretty words:—

Sigh to mirk, ladies! sigh no more, the illusion was complete. We were in the midst of a sentimental group under the summer skies of Sicily. Next the street in Messina, under the rising moon, with Dogberry, Verges, and their watchmen with their formidable weapons, furnishes a good study for the Academy of Design. The illuminated chapel of the sixteenth century, with its meditaval decorations, is evidently the result of study, skill and experience in such things. It will, however, for the general public, be sufficient to say that every scene, and they are all new, from the opening to the end, drew from the house a spontaneous outours of applause, including a general musical murmur of approbation from the ladies. To see is to believe that the equipment of this play has involved an expenditure equal to the cost of an uptown brown stone house with all the modern improvements.

The audience seemed to be so preoccupied with the rich dresses and splendid pictures and groupings of the play as to give to the merits of the performance but a secondary consideration. Nor is it necessary here to go into details. He must indeed, be fastidious upon nou-essentials who is not satisfied with Wallack's Hendelick. He reads it "trippingly upon the folkers" and plays it gracefully. Miss Rose Egtinge's Beatrice was something better than the untamed female horse marine she is too frequently represented—a Reatrice whose bantering and badinage are but the transparent veil of the loving and charming woman. She was rewarded for this rendering by the most emphatic judgment of the house, in which the generous enthusiasm of the mountain was fully evoked. The here of Miss Jennings was the sweet and modest heroine of the great master, as we have learned him. Mr. Gilbert, in every thing satisfactory, will perhaps have to come down a peg or two to reach the mode of Dogberry; but the traignt of this play was a genuitae Shakspearean festival, and to Niblo's Garden.-Fun and frolle, sanked with beauty, have set their throne on the stage at Niblo's, and last night held their first reception. The bevy of golden-haired burlesquers who have been charming the town at Wood's Museum since September last were the happy parties engaged in "Striking Oil in Family Jars," and the testimony of a crowded, crammed and delighted house was unanimous that they have struck oil of the best and most pleasing kind. Anticipating some such result as this which was exhibited last night, envy has been busy with the story that the golden hair of these favorites of the public is borrowed, or of another color, of not hair at all; but there the giornous tresses streamed in all their luxuriant

"Forty Theyes" is an English Durrey, "Forty Theyes" is an English Durrey, and the old spectacle with sufficient similarity of plot on the old spectacle of that name and filled with jokes, puns and local of that name and filled with jokes, puns and local that name and the salts adapted to the latitude of New York. A springwith sufficient similarity of plot on the old spectacle of that name and filled with Jokes, puns and local nits adapted to the latitude of New York. A sprinking of a fairy plot is interwoven in the burlesque to bring into play the wealth of beauty and stage machinery with which Niblo's abounds in the present lavish management, and to give a reason for some of the rapid changes. Ganem (Miss Lydia Thompson), the son of All Baba (Mr. Hill), is in love with Amber (Miss Lizzie Kelsey) and beloved by Morgiana (Miss Lisz Weber), which gives rise to sundry amusing contretemps. Abdalish (Miss Pauline Markham), as Captain of the "Forty" makes a magnificent offset to Hassarac (Mr. Harry Beckett), his lieutenant, and the "The Jonkey" (by —), forms a novel and laughable adjunct to the terpsichorean band. The music is full of popular melodies and song, and the dances and misse en soène of the forty beautiful thieves, under command of their magnificent leader, was wonderfully effective. The appointments of the stage were got up with the profusion characteristic with Jarrett & Palmer, and require only the improvement which practice always adds after the first might. As usual with this favorite company, many of the melodies and dances were loudly applauded and encored. The only fault we have to find is that the piece will bear pruning, as it is too long for a single sitting; and perhaps it would be well to divide it into two acts. With the "Forty Thieves" the Lydia Thompson troupe have added another to their already powerful attractions, and have proved to us that their graceful and charming leader can, with a little study of New York tastes and needs, make herself the favorite actress of the metropolis. In the contest now inaugurated between the regular drama, operatories and the burlesque for popular favor she holds the winning cards, as the immense and enchanted andience last night at Niblo's will testify. Her wonderful grace and finish, assisted by the varied abilities and charms of her troupe and the unrivalled numor of Mr tached to this place of entertainment was filled last night to overflowing. The occasion was one of than ordinary interest. One troupe of very highest order of merit had left it and had carried all their attractions to another centre. A new troupe claimed the attention of the audience and asked its approbation. The new band comprised such persons as Mr. and Mrs. Florence, old and tried favorities. Besides other well known New York favorites it inimportation from the London stage. The piece chosen for the purpose of revealing the merits of the new performers was entitled "The Field of the Cloth of Gold." The celebrated meeting of Henry new performers was entitled "The Field of the Cloth of Gold." The celebrated meeting of Henry the Eighth of Engiand and Francis the First of France was a sufficiently convenient peg on which to hang the fantasies of an evening. We cannot say we discovered in the piece any special excellence. It allowed Mile, Morlacchi and her newly selected saltatorial troupe to show what they could do. That they did well, especially Mile. Morlacchi, we must admit, although we claim the right to say that in some important particulars there is room for improvement. The attempt to conceal legs last night was not agreeable to the audience, and was far from comfortable to the performers. If we are to have legs, let us have them. Clumsy concealments are annoyances all round. Morlacchi is certainly one of the linest danseuses we have seen on the American stage. Mr. and airs. Florence, as they always do, played their parts well. Miss Rose Massey is tail, handsome, elegant, skilful and full of spirit. She adds to her other attractions that of a blonde, and the blonde is now the rage. But Miss diassey wants voice, and all her other attractions do not compensate for the absence of this grand rebuistle. Voice, after all, is more than legs in a first class performer. Still we must admit that Miss Massey is in some respects a rival to Miss Lydia Thompson. We ought not to forget Mas Rose Cook and Miss Lillie Edridge, both of wnom played their parts remarkably well. The whole thing was perhaps a little too absurd and wanting in livelness. The dialogue admits of very extensive improvement. On the whole, we must admit that if we have seen better we have seen worse first ingus.

MIL AND MISS BUCHANAN .- Mr. McKeon Buchanan and his daughter, Miss Virginia Buchanan, performed last night at this theatre in what is called on the bill a new and original romantic drama named "The Plebetan Daughter; or, A Father's Vengeance." The piece is by Mr. Henry Morford. It is the old story of love between the high and low in rank and the evil consequences of it. Ramon, a prince, the son and heir of the Duke of Baden, falls desperately in love with Hilda, the daughter of Oden, a brokendown merchant and poor man. It was love at first sight, and the damsel is as deep in it as the prince.
He seduces her, and then, urged by a sense of honor, he promises to marry het, even though he loses his titles and weaith. His father, the reigning Duke of Baden, has made an alliance for the son with a noble lady, and when he finds the prince determined to defeat his purpose and to marry the low-born maid he threatens him with disinteritance and finally pronounces a curse on his disobedience. In the meantime Oden, the father of Hilda, discovers the love affair between his daughter and the prince and her disgrace, and threatens vengeance upon the seducer. The prince, however, resolves to marry Hilda, and arrangements are made, much to the joy of her father, to have the marriage performed by a priest at some obscure chapel. The Duke of Baden finds out what is going to take place and operates upon the priest or refuse to perform the ceremony and to forbid the marin love with Hilda, the daughter of Oden, a brokencapel. The Duke of Haden finds out what is going to take place and operates upon the priest to refuse to perform the cereinony and to forbid the marriage ever taking place in the name of the Church and the Duke just as the lovers approach the altar. The father's vengeance follows, and this ill-sorted love and attempted missiliance ends disassrously. The drama is not remarkable for taleut, and will never take the place of so many, both ancient and modern, of superior merit. The only actors in it last night worth naming are Mr. Mr. Buchanan and his daughter. Mr. Buchanan performed the part of Oden very well, but not with much dramatic force. It was simply a fair performent ance. Miss Buchanan was natural and graceful in much dramatic force. It was simply a fair performance. Miss Buchanan was natural and graceful in manner, but not remarkable in acting or declamation. She would have been better, doubtless, for she is not without talent, had the drama been of a higher character and she had been more inspired by the author. There was a poor house, and this was enough to chill her in the first appearance before a New Fork audience. The "Pieceian Daughter" with hardly have a successful run when there are so many superior attractions at the other theatres. The manager should try something else.

THEATER COMIQUE.—This bijou temple of Thalia, which was consumed by fire on the night of the 4th of last December, respensed last evening under its old and popular flangement, with a good company and many new and attractive novelties. Like that fabled bird—the Phœnix—the Theatre Comique rises from its ashes purified and beautified by reason of the fire and gifted with a new lease of life, which from its ashes purified and beautified by reason of the fire, and gifted with a new lease of life, which with judicious management will probably hold good for many years to come. The interior of the theatre has been entirely rebuilt, but presents pretty much for many years to come. The interior of the theatre has been entirely rebuilt, but presents pretty much the same neat and unostentations appearance as it did previous to the calamity which befel it in December. It will seat 1,500 persons and is tastily decorated, white, red and gold being the prevailing colors. The rebuilding of this theatre cost $20,000. As heretofore, this establishment will be devoted to the production of light comedies, burlesques and vaudeville performances. Last evening an excellent programme was offered, consisting of "The Married Rake" and a localized, musical burlesque, entitled "Pinto." Inferspersed with the characteristic songs of Mr. William Horace Lingard. The louse was densely crowded with an entusiastic audience, and everything connected with its remanguration passes off in an exceedingly pleasant manner. All the old favorites were warmly welcomed back to the metropolis, and the new claimants for metropolitan honors were accorded a generous velcome. Miss Ethel Norman, an English blonde of the Lydia Thompson type, sporting bleached hair and two or three of the fashionable Parisian patches of black court-plaster upon different parts of her face, and with a decidedly "Dundrearyish" accent, created quite a favorable impression upon her first appearance in this city. The burlesque of "Piuto," which concluded the evening's entertainment, is a ciever travesty upon Odenbach's opera bunge of "Orphée aux Enfers" and abounds in ciever puns and local lates at the folies of the times. This piece brought out the full strength of the entire company, and it is almost needless to add that Miss Alice Dunning as Orpheus, Mr. William H. Lingard as Piuto, and Miss Ethel Norman as Artstoxua, in their several rôles, carried off the honors of the evening.

Frank Lawlor, who has been playing an engage ment in London, returned to this city on Saturday.

Miss Kate Newton, the leading lady of the Broad way, is so far recovered from her dangerous litness

The chairs of Barrett & McCullough's California theatre are a daring innovation on the ancient custom of making theatre goers as uncomfortable as possible. They are made of laurel wood; the seat is twenty-three inches wide and heavily cushioned, and the sitter can till himself backward or forward as he fixes by means of a movable back. Under each seat is a receptacle for a hat, where it is thoroughly guarded from being summarily converted into a spintoon or a foot ottoman by a thoughtless or vulgar au parts of the world, to participate in the expected restoration of the faith, even as the israelites expected one day to turn their steps from the money marks to take Holy City. Boothroyd Fairclough, whom an English gentleman by the fine old Norman same of Smith pronounces "the greatest tragedian since Edmund Kean," is already heralded. Young Lawlor was seen, with his visor up, rehearsing "Hamlet" on Twenty-fourth street for a trial trip. As for "readers," they are "like the leaves of the forest when summer is green." It is a kind of fistrionic camp meeting, and there will be lots of fun among the faithful; but

There comes a reckoning when the banquet's o'er; That dreadful reckoning when men smile no more. A son of Rachel is clerk in the gas works of Dijon, the Diana guard, tiger robes, &c., are very rich and effective.

Miss Annie Wood, the comedienne who has recently leaped into popularity as a member of "the Great Lingard Company." is the daughter of a Nantucket whaler, who intended her for the ministry Destiny ordained otherwise, and Miss Wood was anatched from the thankless task of humanizing the carniverous Congos to adorn the buskined stage Miss Wood's "walk rounds" are much admired, an her "leading fairles" are models of imitation for in experienced fairles.
